In the time of his own great unravelling, Francis of Assisi chose to turn toward gratitude, singing a song of praise known as the Canticle of Creation. Joanna Macy's Work That Reconnects invites us also to choose gratitude and put our attention instead on "The Great Turning" the movement to a life sustaining society that she calls "the essential adventure of our time." At the end of his life, Francis of Assisi told his followers: "I have done that which was mine to do, may Christ teach you yours."
